WATER supply for the city of London, which has a population of 7.5 million, has been proposed in a plan to divert water from the River Great Ouse, 100 miles away, to the city. The plan, which is being considered by the Greater London Council, would involve the construction of a 100-mile-long pipeline and a 100-mile-long tunnel to carry the water to the city.

As a result, the 1990s have been a decade of significant change for the U.S. economy. The economy has grown at a rapid pace, and the unemployment rate has fallen to its lowest level in decades. The 1990s, according to the survey, will see investment in infrastructure, health care, education, housing, and other "social" issues, although energy remains the priority.

"We will see more investment in these areas, but probably not as much as in the 1980s," says the survey.

the 1990s, the number of people in the United States who are obese has increased by 50 percent. In 1990, 15 percent of the population was obese, and by 2000, that number had risen to 23 percent. The increase in obesity is not limited to the United States. In fact, the prevalence of obesity has increased in every country in the world, with the most dramatic increases occurring in developing countries. In 1975, only 1 percent of the world's population was obese, but by 2000, that number had risen to 6 percent. The increase in obesity is a global phenomenon, and it is a cause for concern because obesity is a major risk factor for heart disease, diabetes, and other chronic diseases.

Bird flu found in pigs two years ago—China

BEIJING — Scientists in China have found evidence that a deadly bird flu virus was present in pigs as early as 2002, two years before the first human cases were reported. The discovery, published in the journal Emerging Infectious Diseases, suggests that the virus may have been circulating in China for a longer period than previously thought. The researchers analyzed samples of pig tissue and found the H5N1 virus in 10 out of 100 samples. The virus was found in pigs from different regions of China, including Guangdong, where the first human cases were reported in 2004. The researchers also found that the virus was present in pigs from 2002 to 2004, which is consistent with the timeline of the human cases. The discovery raises concerns about the potential for a new pandemic, as the virus has the ability to jump from pigs to humans. The researchers are now working to identify the source of the virus and to develop strategies to prevent further spread.

Small telescopes discover planet of Jupiter's size

ASTRONOMERS using small telescopes have discovered a planet that is the size of Jupiter, but orbits a star much further away than our own solar system. The planet, named HD 10180b, was discovered by a team of astronomers using the HARPS spectrograph at the ESO's La Silla Observatory in Chile. The planet is located about 125 light years from Earth. It is a gas giant, similar in size to Jupiter, and orbits its host star in a circular path. The discovery was made using the radial velocity method, which involves measuring the wobble of a star caused by the gravitational pull of a planet. The team of astronomers includes researchers from the University of Cambridge, the University of Warwick, and the European Southern Observatory. The discovery is significant because it shows that planets of this size can exist at a distance from their host star that is similar to the distance between Jupiter and the Sun in our solar system.

Figure 1: Schematic representation of the experimental design. The figure is divided into two main sections: 'Pretest' and 'Main Experiment'. The 'Pretest' section includes a 'Pretest 1' (N=10) and a 'Pretest 2' (N=10). The 'Main Experiment' section includes a 'Main Experiment 1' (N=20) and a 'Main Experiment 2' (N=20). Each section shows a sequence of stimuli (e.g., 'Stimulus 1', 'Stimulus 2') and response options (e.g., 'Yes', 'No'). The 'Pretest' section shows a single trial, while the 'Main Experiment' section shows a sequence of trials. The 'Main Experiment 1' section shows a sequence of trials with a 'Yes' response, while the 'Main Experiment 2' section shows a sequence of trials with a 'No' response.

Is Patrick Moore an 'eco-traitor'?

PATRICK Moore is one of the founders of the dynamic environmental organization known worldwide as Greenpeace. From 1971 (when Greenpeace was founded) to 1986 (when he turned his back on it), Moore was at the forefront of all the action—chasing whale- and seal-hunting ships, campaigning against uranium mining on toxic solid waste or nuclear warships—on an old, dilapidated fishing boat that sailed across the North Pacific.

Then, suddenly, in the mid-80s, he made an about-face on these environmental projects and began instead to speak on the advantages of genetic engineering.

Traitor and parasite

Initially, his former colleagues in environmental work were cold but as an eco-freer, parasite and parasite. His past conviction is a highly respected environmental organization like Greenpeace obviously makes him a traitor in the eyes of pro-GMO (genetically modified organisms) leaders. They could even point to him, a renowned champion of environmentalism, as an ally whom they argue that genetic engineering has all the advantages and environmental groups opposing it are wrong and short-sighted.

Moore has argued that while pro-GMO supporters aimed for more higher crop yields and more nutritious varieties with pest resistance to make production less costly through reduced fertilization.

He questioned Greenpeace's approach to keep farmers from growing Golden Rice. Doing so, he said, would millions of sick kids would probably go blind.

Others who criticize the Golden Rice and the variety itself point to blindness because of the addition of a vitamin gene. While some of the critics say not being established, Moore believes the whole technology shouldn't be distributed. They say he grows rice in non-developing it, he argues.

Why the comeback

But the question remains: Why did Moore turn his back on all that he once believed in?

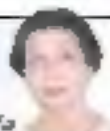

One of his critics, Bruce Berman, a writer based in Boston, wrote a few months ago in Moore's discovery of the more "responsible development" (an organization) led by Tom Burke of Friends of the Earth (FTE) which he interpreted as "a job for another day," meaning, taking the new environmental values and incorporating them into the traditional social and economic order that were public policy. This was obviously not acceptable to his former colleagues.

The second reason, according to Berman, is revenge. There had been complaints about Moore's "watergate leadership style" and "abuse of power." When he said that he would not be able to get through water to let him leave his own in Greenpeace's board of directors, he decided where to go. He left Greenpeace but he had to contend with his old group that was still pushing against whatever supporters for protecting the world.

Moore turned to logging, joining a group started by the timber industry. He worked for the logging of the United Fruit Company in several parts and government regulation, in which he continues to be successful.

Principles vs money

Another reason, Berman adds, is money. Some critics have called Moore a "corporate shill" for endorsing environmental principles for money, for allowing himself work groups to use attacked against Moore. Moore has said that they will push for his spending and marketing activities. He was Greenpeace Secretary, an environmentalist organization.

Now in the Philippines, he has his critics, too. Some Inquirers, formerly a Greenpeace and genetic engineering campaign who will don volunteer work for the organization, call the new outlook of the former "hero" plus "greenwash" in his essay called Inquirers focus on. "Moore gives himself more as an industry bleach salesman, more so-called 'advancing' that he had not done any research on genetic engineering, and had his paper been peer-reviewed."

Still, Berman finds coherence in some of Moore's statements (which include GMO). The principles Moore goes by these days is attributed to a simple statement: the Inquirers more than it says: "While we can be certain good, that's a religious interpretation, not a scientific or logical one."

Therefore, such a statement is not likely to win him any more adherents. Not from the religious sector, nor from conservationists and scientists. And certainly not from his former colleagues in the Philippines.

We can only imagine the loss of an ally who had stood so much for the common good.

Certified environment-friendly detergent

FOR DECADES now, one product has been the constant partner in washing machines—Pride Washing Machine Detergent, the first laundry detergent in the Philippines specially made for machine washing.

Pride detergent is the first product of AGI, a Filipino manufacturing company. When AGI started, Pride was considered to have environmental features like commercial laundries, hotels and hospitals. Pride was packed in 25-kg bags and because known for its low-lather but effective cleaning action formula, Pride was eventually accepted in homes and recognized as corporations and grocery stores.

Pride is also biodegradable and environment-friendly. It is the first detergent in the Philippines produced by the China and Glass Foundation Inc. or the Glass China Foundation.

The logo at the front panel of the packaging is a product and of approval that guides consumers on environment-friendly products. The bonus certificate to use the logo was awarded by President Macapagal-Arroyo recently.
